AIMS AND SCOPE

Sri Lanka is currently facing many transitions: economic, epidemiological, demographic, technological and social. The world economy, too, is evolving, with technological progress, economic crises and social upheavals demanding more and alternative economic analyses. Both these factors make it imperative for economists in Sri Lanka and overseas, among the academic community and practitioners, to focus on economic research and its dissemination. The Sri Lanka Journal of Economic Research (SLJER), the international journal of the Sri Lanka Forum of University Economists, seeks to fulfil this mandate.

The SLJER is a refereed bi-annual tri-lingual journal. It creates a space where research, particularly policy-related research, can be disseminated and so contributes to the economic thinking in the country in this period. The critical evaluation of policy is essential if optimal use is to be made of the demographic window of opportunity. Equity and social welfare, the cornerstone of economic thinking in the country, and the challenges posed to such fundamentals by economic liberalisation, globalisation and technological progress make it vital to dwell on ideas and ideals, as well as to collate systematic evidence to support rational policymaking. The aim of this journal, then, is to support such processes through dissemination and discussion.

The SLJER is open for publication of high-quality research outputs of scholars, researchers and practitioners in Economics and Development Policy, even though it primarily provides an opportunity for authors presenting papers at the Sri Lanka Economic Research Conference, the annual international symposium of the Sri Lanka Forum of University Economists to disseminate the outcomes of their research. Apart from the research articles, the journal carries a special section titled 'Perspectives', which articulates alternative thinking and approaches to Economics. Book reviews are included as well.

All articles in this journal are subject to a rigorous double-blind peer-review process, followed by a thorough scrutiny by the Editorial Committee to ensure high academic and research standards prior to final acceptance for publication.
